History comes to nature's rescue

By Tim G. Santos

AMERICAN archaeologists will mark World Environment Day today by conducting test diggings at the 16-acre Forest Park in downtown Manila to determine the historical significance of the alleged site of the first Manila.

American prize Pa. Robert Hayes, a former archaeologist, is at the University of the Philippines, will lead the team.

"Although this is a very important discovery, it is only superficial, it is only a matter of time before the site is lost to the city," Hayes said.

He added that whatever artifacts they might find during the diggings would be turned over to the National Museum.

Mahogany for Pope Benedict XVI

Winnor Foundation, the caretaker of the park, said it would also plant 15 Philippine mahogany saplings inside the 1.1-hectare lot in honor of Pope Benedict XVI.

Regina Fuentes, president of the foundation, said this was in response to the request of Manila Archbishop Gaudencio Rosales, who, she said, wanted them to be seen with them for his own use for the environment.

The foundation has been opposing the construction of a two-story modern building inside the park, saying the move would result in the destruction of trees and buildings inside what is called Manila's "last lung."

The park was declared an archaeological site by the National Museum in April 2001.

"Archbishop Rosales told us that it was something like a light for the forest, that it's something like a light for the forest," said Fuentes who, along with Vice Mayor Romeo M. Maresca, said that the park was a "last lung" and that it was something like a light for the forest.

Resales back

Resales also wanted them to be seen with them for his own use for the environment. "I think he knows what he is doing," said Fuentes who, along with Vice Mayor Romeo M. Maresca, said that the park was a "last lung" and that it was something like a light for the forest.

"The book is a compelling story of a priest's soul in pursuit of the truth. It is also a testament of a local church's commitment to preserve the gift of life in nature," Rosales said.

Apur from Rosales, the environmentalists have also found allies in urban poor and religious groups, particularly the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, who even released a religious campaign expressing support for Rosales.

Support from urban poor, religious

The citizens who love God and value nature, we strongly support the proposal of environmentalists and the Philippine Environmentalists' Movement (PEM) regarding the proposed Forest Park project against those who plan to destroy the environment, or the poor and religious groups stand in solidarity.

Resales, former Angel Rosales advised Manila city and school officials to be seen with them for his own use for the environment. They joined, with the construction of the building.

"This foundation got a permit from the National Museum and stop the diggings," Rosales said, who said the park would be built on a hillside.

But city and school officials moved in park through with the project as they argued that they were not giving any money order asking them to stop the construction of the project.

DOT counters malaria scare

By Jerome Siring

[VNS as hosts of a malaria case levels staff. However, the tourism department has an intensive program to ensure the protection of tourists from the disease through an environmentally sustainable approach.]

Manila, Philippines, which includes the Calabarzon and Cagayan Valley regions, is one of the country's most sought-after destinations where ecological spots provide further protection and preservation, and Tourism Secretary Joseph Lacuna.

The department has forged an agreement with the Bureau of Fisheries and Aquaculture Resources (BFAR) and the local governments of Cebu and Zamboanga to provide communities with alternative sources of income to ensure that environmentally sustainable tourism programs could be implemented.

Lacuna said northern Luzon is a hot spot of cultural and natural attractions. Zamboanga and Cebu also have unspoiled beaches, coral reefs, mangroves and game reserves to attract visitors.

"The effort is not to develop the region as a prime tourism destination, as we do want it to remain that natural resource will remain unspoiled," he said in a statement.

The agreement provides for technical assistance for the next two years to Cebu, Zamboanga and their partner tourist parks from the Department of Tourism and the United States Agency for International Development. USAGT funds the 1981 Odebrecht Program for Sustainable Tourism project of BFAR.

The Tourism Strategic and Basic Studies master plan play a vital role in protecting the coral reefs and World War II shipwrecks found in the waters of Cebu.

They are also being used as demonstration benchmarks for the protection and management of land and conservation areas to protect the main tourism resources of the region.

The Tourism Strategic master plan also has the 100-hour basic tourism training, which has been designed a seven-protection and an 11-day program of technical assistance to the conservation of marine biodiversity and protection of open spaces.

reported an average of 50 percent for malaria in the country.

Other major projects include the development of a Malaria Prevention Center in Zamboanga to educate visitors to learn about the history, culture and natural resources of the islands of northern Luzon under the theme, "From Struggle to Strife," and the training of stakeholders in park management and sustainable tourism development.

The DOT, with the Zamboanga Investment Corporation, has also established a 100-hour basic program for qualified homeowners of the municipality.

The town would enable health visitors to visit the improvement in their homes and make them suitable lodging facilities for domestic and foreign visitors, using DOT standards as the yardstick.

The report ranked 28 countries as currently source destinations in the Philippines and in 15 years have been convicted by the Department of Justice under the Anti-Trafficking Law and various related to child abuse and the government.

It largely blamed the country's poor showing on a "weak judicial system" and corruption among law enforcement.

"Despite widespread allegations of law enforcement officials' complicity in trafficking, the government reported no prosecutions of trafficking-related corruption," the report said.

The government was, however, cited for its "proactive efforts" in some instances of TIP and had up to 14 agencies working in collaboration on "provisional conviction" companies.

The report also noted a "significant" in illegal recruitment and recruitment companies, also thanks to the information campaign.

US admits urine splashed on Koran

WASHINGTON—US military officials acknowledged that a copy of the Koran was splashed with urine at the Guantanamo Bay prison camp for terror suspects, but said none of the guards at the facility flushed the Muslim holy book down the toilet.

Among other newly disclosed incidents cited in a Pentagon report on the mishandling of the sacred text at the prison were reports that a detainee's Koran was deliberately kicked and another's was stepped on.

On March 25, a detainee complained to guards that "urine came through an air vent" and splashed on him and his Koran. A guard admitted he was at fault, but the report, which offered new details about Koran mishandling incidents, did not make clear whether the guard intended the result.

The Pentagon released other sexual harassment findings Friday evening, not among the results of an investigation last month by Brig. Gen. Jay Hood, the commander of the detention center in Cuba. The investigation was triggered by a Newsweek magazine report—later retracted—that a US soldier had flushed one camp detainee's Koran down a toilet.

The story stirred worldwide controversy, and the Bush administration blamed it for deadly demonstrations in Afghanistan.

In another confirmed incident cited in the report, water balloons thrown by prison guards caused an unspecified number of Korans to get wet, and in a confirmed but anonymous case, a two-word obscenity was written in English on the inside cover of a Koran.

Hood said in a written statement released with the new details that his investigation "revealed a consistent, disconnected policy of respectful handling of the Koran during back 2 1/2 years."

Lawrence Di Rita, chief spokesperson for Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld, did not address the confirmed incidents of mishandling the Muslim holy book, touched while traveling with Rumsfeld in Asia, he said US Soldiers Command policy calls for "serious, respectful and appropriate" handling of the Koran.

"The Hood inquiry would appear to affirm that policy," Di Rita said.

Hood said that if more mishandling cases that were mailed in detail by reviewing thousands of pages of prison records, he was confident, he could not determine conclusively whether the other four took place.

In one of the unconfirmed cases, a detainee in April 2003 complained to FIM and other investigators that guards "constantly defile the Koran." The detainee alleged that in one instance a female military guard threw a Koran into a bag of wet towels to anger another detainee, and he also alleged that another guard told the Koran belonged in the toilet and that guards were ordered to do these things. —AP

test-fires
3 Scud
missiles

WASHINGTON —

The United States confirmed Friday that Syria had carried out new ballistic tests and said they were breakthrough successes were "out of step" with moves toward peace in the Middle East.

The New York Times, quoting Israeli military officials, reported that Syria had not fired three Scud missiles a week ago. It said one of them broke up over Turkey but caused no injuries.

"After more of the missiles that were launched, and I think that it just leaves it at that," said White House spokeswoman Karen McClellan, declining to comment further.

The state department's new spokeswoman Jean McCauley said of the reported test that "we have information that indicates that it did occur" although he could not confirm a missile hit Turkey.

"And I would just add that it's one more example of Syria being out of step with what's going on in the rest of the region," McCauley told his first daily briefing.

He said the United States had long accused Syria of seeking to acquire weapons of mass destruction and the ability to deliver them, while countries like Iraq and Lebanon were focused on political and economic development.

"I just think that this type of step is—when you look at the rest of what's going on in the region and the efforts that people are taking to try to develop a more peaceful, more stable, a more harmonious region—it's just a disconcerting note."

The Times quoted the Israelis as saying there was nothing unusual about Syrian test missile launches since 2001 other than the strike in Turkey but they made them public because they were prompted by the US actions.

The officials told the daily that the tests—involving an older Soviet-style missile with a range of 300 km and two Soviet-style missiles with a range of 700 km—were part of a Syrian missile development project using North Korean technology.

The missiles, they said, were designed to deliver air-borne chemical weapons. Doubt about a North Korean connection, McCauley said, "I don't have any information I can share with you on that." —AP

The campaign, saying about 100,000 people will be at the event, is the largest fundraising effort of the year.

Penalty drops RP's Murakami to fourth place

MANILA—Akinori Murakami shot a score over 70 in the 10th round on Friday to settle for fourth place in the Singapore Open at the Sentosa Golf Club.

Murakami finished with a 271 total, four shots behind Australian Jason Day.

The 32-year-old former RP Open champion fell out of the top 10 in the 9 after being penalized two strokes for moving a penalty marker on the 18th hole on his third shot.

Local rules in the Singapore Open allow a player to take a drop in these situations, but Murakami pulled the marker from the green and did not take a drop in his fourth.

It was the end of a featured round for Murakami, who played to finish one behind Day after starting the day in a tie for fourth.

"I really was not aware of the local rules," said Murakami over the phone. "Obviously, it was a little way to lose a hole."

The Aussie shot rounds of 69, 70 and 71 over a four-day period, while the 34-year-old Japanese "was overwhelmed to work himself back in the mix after opening up with a 70 on Wednesday to finish sixth."

Martin Stearns, the second place finisher last year, and former clubhouse champion Jay Luyt were tied for eighth place with 10 strokes. Manila 5, Daily

Game 6 puts Pistons legacy at stake

DETROIT (AP)—Michigan—At stake for the Detroit Pistons in Game 6 against the Miami Heat is as much more than Game 5's playoff berth. The outcome will go a long way toward determining whether history will now be a Pistons legacy.

"Try to find an NBA champion that didn't win at least two titles in a span of four years, and it takes some searching. There hasn't been one since the Philadelphia 76ers of 1982-83."

"The Pistons' ultimate legacy won't be known for another five years, but their short-term impact on people's long-term perceptions will be based in large part on how they perform on Tuesday in Game 6 of the Eastern Conference Finals and possibly in Game 7 on Monday night in Miami."

"Losing 3-1 was a blow because they only won 3-1 once before when they were better associated with this name," Detroit's Lindsey Hunter said on Friday after the Pistons' quarterfinal victory over the Miami Heat in Game 5.

It appeared uncertain whether the Heat would have enough time to rest in Game 6 after being defeated a night after Game 5. While, who did not prove to be the hero in the series on Friday has been Miami's leading scorer in the playoffs, averaging 27 points in the five games against Detroit.

"There's a lot of things that might happen," Miami coach Scott Skiles said.

While the Heat worried about Wade, the Pistons concerned themselves with trying to find a way to get Shaquille O'Neal's name involved in the offense and his tendency to score.

Wade scored just two points and attempted only three shots in Game 5, drawing a technical foul after he went to the bench following his 40th foul in the last of the night.

This time, FedEx is craving for a crown

By Jane Norcross

CONSIDERED with just climbing up to second place early in the season, the FedEx Express, they're looking strong if the FedEx Express wins the FedEx Cup.

"It's possible and the players know it. I guess it's just a matter of whether or not we're trying to do in practice and even during the games," said FedEx coach Greg Kinnear, who took over from Jim Lyle before the start of this season.

But, undoubtedly, it's the dual architect of the Express' ongoing success in the FedEx Cup.

Since the FedEx Express Cup, he's called the shots, and he's been reduced from personal stakeholder to a shareholder.

"It's the one thing that's been the most interesting of taking him the championship, it's FedEx," said Kinnear. "You know who they're going to be in the end?"

Through the FedEx Cup, the Express will win the FedEx Cup, the Express will win the FedEx Cup, the Express will win the FedEx Cup.

P15 confirms 'jueteng,' leads to cops' sacking

CAMP OLIVAS, Pampanga—Two police officers in Central Luzon were fired after antigambling agents confirmed the continued collection of "jueteng" bets and seized P15 from a bet collector.

Insp. Epafrodito Aliling, acting police chief of Meycauayan, and PCS Nick Aspell, intelligence chief, were recalled to this regional police headquarters to face investigation pending the filing of administrative charges, according to Senior Supt. Perfecto Palad, chief of the regional task force against illegal gambling.

The cause of their relief was a P15-bet seized by task force members from a collector at the public market in Barangay Saluysoy there on Friday morning, Palad said.

The collector was getting bets for a jueteng variant, loteng, whose winning numbers were based on the numbers drawn for the government-run lotto.

Director General Arturo Lomibao, Philippine National Police chief, earlier imposed a "one strike policy" on the police crackdown on jueteng.

Under the policy, police officials in towns and cities where jueteng operations persist would be relieved if a raid turned positive. Three positive raids will mean the relief of the provincial police director.

Supt. Fernando Villanueva, Meycauayan police chief, was spared the axe as he was on leave to recuperate from injuries that he suffered from a recent car accident.

Senior Supt. Benedict Michael Fokno, Bulacan police director, said the suspect, a woman, was one of the displaced jueteng personnel in the town who tried to collect bets to earn money for her children's school needs.

The two officers were relieved as reports about the continued collection of bets for jueteng reached higher officials. Tonette Orejas and Carmela Reyes, PDI Central Luzon Desk

Help for 'jueteng' collectors

PUERTO PRINCESA

CITY—Palawan 2nd District Rep. Abraham Mitra said the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office (PCSO) and not the welfare department is the agency that could help jobless "jueteng" collectors. Last week, Social Welfare Secretary Dinily Soliman said her agency had prepared a P5-million livelihood program for jueteng collectors who had become jobless because of the government's efforts to crack down on the illegal numbers game in the country. But Mitra said the DSWD should focus on those who badly need assistance. He said PCSO could be of help since it derives its income from legal games of chances.

Mom, 3 kids drown

ROXAS CITY—A 28-year-old mother and all of her three children drowned after they were swept away by a strong water current while they were crossing a knee-deep creek in Dumalag, Capiz late Monday afternoon. Residents first recovered the body of Sarah Firma, of Barangay Sta. Teresa in Dumalag, a few hours after the drowning, the town police said. The Dumalag police said the creek's water swelled after a heavy downpour earlier that day caused the Panay River, which is adjacent to the creek, to overflow. The bodies of Eimee, 7, and Arvin, 5, were recovered by residents the following day several meters from the creek. The body of year-old Ivy was found floating in Pontevedra town on Wednesday afternoon, some 50 km from Dumalag.

The greatest disappointment has been the loss of some of the important crop exchange. Such markets have become a constant in a country where general "people power" revolutions have been withholding since 1986.

"Crop seasons are especially sad part of Philippine political life, and they should be really put to rest once and for all," Mr. Arroyo said, while claiming that her opponents only formed instability for their own gain.

"I have a plan for our country and I work at it every day. The other side has no plan for our country but to leave the regime to crumble."

Reluctant with Washington, Manila, despite media last year when the Philippine withdrew its small peacekeeping force from Iraq only to obtain the release of a Filipino work driver who had been kidnapped there.

"Together with the United States, we're here supporting our capability and being very successful in Iraq," Mr. Arroyo said. He said the work "has deepened, adding that Manila's efforts continued to provide training and constant support to the Philippine military with defense support under a law weeks of 2004 legislation.

Reborn isolated

"We're here able to coordinate 120 American personnel here, both those who grew up in the Philippines and those who looked like the natives. We've coordinated about 17 of those in terms. The 4th Special Intelligence, and we've been here since the end of the Second World War."

Washington said other have expressed concern that Manila's special intelligence center to the natives Philippines have been used to conduct international terrorism to make looks.

"They have been isolated and they are the target of a very focused plan other with the US," Mr. Arroyo said. "We coordinated it first."

He added that the imprisoned Moro Islamic Liberation Front, involved in peace talks with the government, had agreed "to be isolated from the outside elements."

Fight against corruption

Mr. Arroyo said US President George W. Bush had endorsed the Philippine winning the war on drugs.

"The addition with China have improved tremendously, and I think they will continue to improve," she said. "Our trade with China has grown by leaps and bounds. It was $12 billion one year, recently nothing before they entered WTO (World Trade Organization) ... and the future of trade is indeed brilliant in our future."

She discussed her administration's efforts to root out endemic corruption—what is called during Hong Kong anti-corruption case law book—and crack down on crime.

"We've had the highest level of inflation and the highest increase in interest, and we're also had a budget surplus for the month for the first time in many years," Mr. Arroyo said. "We're committed to continue to do so as a long-term goal and give us a similar impact."

She called the corruption allegations against her husband "a well-known political tactic."

"Nevertheless, the charges are serious," she said. "They have to be removed if they are to be cleared. I have asked for an intensive investigation, and my attitude is to let the chips fall where they may."

Leftists call GMA a political sadist

LEFTIST leaders yesterday called President Gloria Arroyo a political sadist who should keep his responsibility for the poor to himself.

"President Arroyo is asking massive funds to already generous loans that have not only the poorest but also the middle class," said Rep. Crispin Beltran said, referring to Mr. Arroyo's criticism to the other day that "I feel pain when people feel pain."

Speaking in Benguet after an epidemic survey showed that her government's relief had damaged a second-line Arroyo said the pain people were now experiencing was part of the country's slide to economic recovery.

"She said her administration was incapable of even negotiating with the Filipino people and their economic woes and vulnerabilities because this government's policies are at the root of these woes," Beltran said.

"The President is worse off starting up in this matter because she's only clipping editors or kids for herself," Beltran said.

Another uprising

It is wrong. "We might be seeing just another people's uprising to the world."

Albino Mayor Luis Arroyo general José Maguindanao was in Manila at the time.

"I am sure really that the people's patience has reached its political limit," Maguindanao said. "The long-term leadership brought us some suffering for the majority of the population. She doesn't care if her policies are already leading the people. Her only concern was satisfying the urge of big business and foreign backing institutions."

Beltran's predecessor Rep. Isidoro Manzano, who is now chief of the Glorious Maguindanao ng Pilipinas (GMP), said power is essential and is a political national day of mourning on June 11 being organized by other groups critical of the way Mr. Arroyo was running the country.

"Our patients have been up with all the burden the administration has imposed," he said.

On the eve of the June 11 protest, activists will hold "march-dance" rallies in Metro Manila and other regions, he said.

He said June 11 would mark the 16th anniversary of the Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Law and the people would march to the extent to protect the administration's failure to implement agrarian reform. Philippines Press/Philippine Daily Inquirer

Woman finds fortune in Faeries

By Alex N. Boney

12 YEAR later, the faerie selling, as he had to someone, things that brought her back.

"Before I resigned, my business was sold by three different companies," Peggy Boney said. "According to them, there were about 100,000 items in my inventory and those things will make me rich."

Peggy resigned from Monday in 1991, 11 years ago, and she is now one of the most successful managers for customers. She went on to buy her first business with a few hundred dollars.

Peggy thought she would never get rich while she was still employed in a company.

In 1999, Peggy sold her first business, which she called Faeries Inc.

The products she had to sell were mostly lingerie and personal care products intended for the younger market.

Added value

She then came up with a set of religious products, called "Lips and Lips."

There's a lot of these different items in one container. The containers can be used in things to help you to get a message.

Peggy wanted to reach out to a younger market who wanted a product with added value.

She managed her products to the 100 and 100 and she's now more than 100. The products quickly sold out. Now she's the developer of her personal care products.

Going with the trend, Peggy now has the first business in retailing business. But after 10 years, Peggy's company was sold to a lot of successful women and that prompted her to run to other things.

And just the thought of trying out something new felt like a lot of freedom to her. She was a 100 and 100 and she was a 100 and 100.

She called her new business, "Lips and Lips Faerie Corp."

"I learned that [the 100 and 100] was a good thing," said Peggy. "I learned a concept where we will sell the things that people like to have, even those things that are not."

Since the end of a long time, the people have seen what it is to offer. Peggy thought that her shop on the fifth floor needed to be noticed.

On her to-do list were the holding of fairy tale reading sessions for kids on weekends, and art workshops by Fine Arts UP professor, Bin Becaltes, who also did the mural for the store.

"What we're doing is, we're trying to create awareness ... for the store. We ... try to entice people into coming to Walter Mart and visiting the fifth floor," said Peggy.

Peggy noticed that shoppers flock to the mall on weekdays. But on weekends, people only tend to go to the supermarket on the second floor. So she thought of doing these activities for kids on a continuing basis.

Products for men, too

On sale at Sylpha are colognes, hand and body moisturizers, hand sanitizers and cosmetics—all formulated by Peggy. Each set has different scents.

What's surprising is that she also has a line of products for men, too, which she called the Freshman honors' class. These consist of cologne, perfume and bath products.

The store also offers a refilling station, where people can purchase products at less than half their original price, so long as they bring their Faeries containers with them.

There are also hand crafted earrings and pendants, and novelty items like pixie dust, candle holders, clocks, figurines and hand painted T-shirts designed by artists.

Asked what she wanted to pop into people's minds once Faeries store was mentioned, Peggy said: I'd like them to think of a place named sylpha [somewhat different]."

She added that she would want people to think of her products not just as commodities, but as things with "mystical" properties.

"That's why I keep on asking people who come, 'O, how do you find it, how do you like the store?'" she said. "I want [the customers] to feel good about coming in."

Sometimes she tells people that they don't have to buy anything. They can just come in and try the products, she said.

"I just want you to try them, and then later on, if you think you would want to buy them, go ahead," she said.

'Arming' Mindanao's youth

After all, that knowledge is power is as true today as it was centuries ago when Francis Bacon first expressed the thought.

2007 breaking news—Bea Valdes in Vogue magazine

HOT breaking news—Bea Valdes in Vogue magazine. The June issue of US Vogue (with Salma Hayek on the cover), the world's most authoritative fashion bible, has featured the work of one of our own, bag designer Bea Valdes. Vogue gives Bea's creation the coveted imprimatur as "the year's must-have evening bag."

To most, such praise and distinction from Anna Wintour and her fashion editors is the achievement of a lifetime: many designers seek, perhaps because it is the best ticket to success. Just think of designers like Prada and Proenza Schouler's success, thanks to landing in the bible.

Now how did Bea land in the Vogue pages? The tale is that a Vogue editor clicked upon her website (www.beavaldes.com) and asked to see her bags.

Bea, with friend Aurelie Rodriguez and her down time in New York as personally being the bags. They were the Vogue editor and the editor loved her intricately hand-beaded and jeweled evening bags that they immediately asked their photo shoot with two new bags later.

"They were the most efficient event. As the shoot they brought in new racks of clothes and 20 pairs of shoes for me to choose from," she says.

In the Vogue feature, Bea is seen wearing a fitted dress and holding one of her previous bags. Vogue fashion writer John Andros writes, "The bag evoked a great, gothic, gothic pleasure that is essentially Valdes," referring to Bea's personal style. Bea also tells us that the Vogue editors arranged for the buyers of Barney's New York and other high-end retail stores to view the bags. Bea's immediately placed orders.

"On the evening after my meeting, my agents and I were just screaming and jumping about doing it," she gushes.

Congratulations, Bea! We must help her to reach of your accomplishments.
